

Promoting Equity in Early Childhood: A Storytelling Series to Build Atlantic Connections

May 24th, 2023

“Quote from participant: "What I liked most about this storytelling series is how the storytellers informed us about how children know who they are a lot sooner than we adults think or realize, meaning about their identity, the importance of encouraging identity, the value of children's voices, and the acceptance of every child."

Participants were asked to describe the second session of the storytelling series in one word. Here is what they had to say...

Thank you!

The ECCRC would like first to thank all the storytellers who shared their stories. We value their vulnerability in sharing their own stories and lived experiences and their work to actively engage in the courageous work of dismantling systems of oppression in an effort to achieve equity for all young children and their families. We would also like to thank all of our partners who made this work possible, our funders (Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council [SSHRC] and the Margaret and Wallace McCain Family Foundation) and our creative Graphic Designer, Rach Derrah, and many others.
